About Me

After growing up in the UK, Rob Clare's fascination with the underwater world led him to the Caribbean, where he worked as a scuba instructor – the extreme sport for nerds.

He later retrained as a primary school teacher and moved to Australia in 2001. As a teacher, school principal, and parent, Rob saw firsthand the power of books and the impact stories have on children. Reading bedtime stories – especially those that spark curiosity, teach values, and encourage big questions – became a nightly tradition.

Following a stroke, Rob retired from full-time teaching and began writing for an educational publisher as a content writer on the award winning English Stars. He also launched a parenting blog for single dads called Just Dad It.

In 2025, after much procrastination, Rob published his debut children's book, Mima's Choices, with many more stories planned for the future.
