Mima's Choices

Mima stepped onto the busy playground, full of laughter and shouting. She spotted Penny and ran over.

"Hi, Penny!" she said, beaming.

"Hi, Mima. Want to play handball? We can join that group," Penny offered.

"Sure! I love handball," Mima replied.

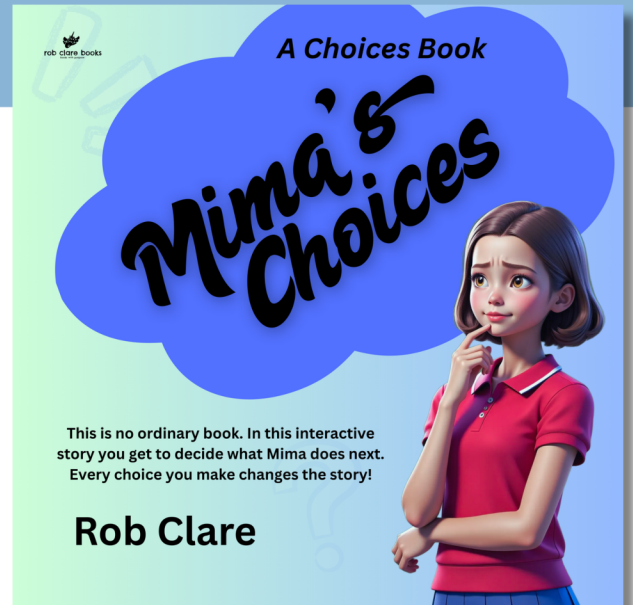

They joined the line, and when it was Mima's turn, Billy sneered and served the ball. Mima focused, but as it bounced toward her, she swung and missed—falling to the ground.

Billy burst out laughing. "Ha! You're terrible! Go play with some Barbies instead!"

Mima's face burned. It wasn't fair. Anger bubbled inside her—and there were no teachers around to see how mean Billy was being.
